a) Who is the narrator of the text?

John is the first-person narrator, because line 87 reads „She looked me over carefully, checking for any clues as to what mood I left Bore in“.

b) How does the choice of narrator influence your feelings, sympathies or opinions concerning John and his father?

John describes his feelings the best, because the narrator is John. So, he can give us first-hand information. Additionally, he puts everything in his perspective, so we're brought to think, that he's right. If John's father was the narrator, then, I guess, we could understand his point of view better. To abstract: The perspective depends significantly on the narrator.
